Ninu dnes čeká první den v nové škole v Anglii! Snaží se, aby to na ní nebylo znát, ale je z toho celá pryč – tím, že se její rodina přestěhovala do Anglie, se pro ni totiž nemění jenom vyučující, ale úplně celý život! Snad aspoň narazí na nějaké sympatické spolužáky. Samotná škola se jí totiž ani trochu nelíbí. Všichni musí nosit nudné školní uniformy a učitelé vypadají mnohem přísnější než v Česku... Naštěstí Nina hned první den narazí na milou Evie, která ji pozve na víkend pod stanem se svými kamarádkami. ✨

Evie stared out of her bedroom window and over the large green fields at the edge of the small town where she was living. She thought long and hard about something exciting to do for her upcoming birthday.

She loved organizing and planning events for her and her school friends. There was nothing she hated more than having to stay inside the house with nothing to do. She didn't enjoy watching television, and she preferred playing football in real life to playing it on the computer.

Many options for her birthday party crossed her mind. Bowling? Cinema? Ice skating? They had all been done before. Evie wanted something more original. She wanted to make the day she turned fifteen a special one. She looked at the boys in the distance kicking a football around. She glanced at a family out walking with their two Labradors.

The sun was beginning to go down and sent a warm pink light on the daisies and daffodils in the fields. Spring was definitely here!

It was a shame that Evie had to be inside doing her maths homework, which was set on Friday. She had left it to the last minute – as usual. She stared outside and wished that she could be out there with her friends. She wanted to enjoy the warm weather, but it was getting late and the homework was due the next day.

She spent an hour or so staring at the boring textbook, while the sun began to disappear behind the trees at the end of the field.

Suddenly she had an idea. She would plan a camping trip for her and her friends! They could have a barbecue outside, play sports all day, have a laugh and stay up late gossiping about school and boys. They would be free. Free! Free to do whatever they wanted.

Evie picked up the phone and called her best friend Emily to tell her about her flash of inspiration. Evie and Emily had been friends since they started secondary school. Despite their different personalities they told each other everything. They shared their problems, discussed the boys who they liked and those they couldn't stand.

Emily lived on the other side of town with her parents. It took about half an hour for Evie to cycle over to her best friend's house – but she often did it because Emily wasn't allowed to cycle through the centre of town on her own. Emily was an only child, although she thought of Evie almost as a sister.

“Hiya Emily!” Evie said excitedly. She couldn’t wait to tell Emily about her plan.

“Erm, hello Evie... What do you want at this time of night?”

Evie had forgotten that Emily always had to be in bed early on school nights.

“I’ve got an excellent plan for my fifteenth birthday party!” exclaimed Evie.

“It’s not ice skating again, is it?” said Emily while she was trying to hide the fact that she was yawning.

Evie couldn’t contain her excitement.

“No. It’s much better than that! It’s going to be so much fun. We’ll all go camping for the night, maybe even two nights. We can go to the Peak District – it’s not far away and my parents could drive us there. Then we can climb hills, play football and stay up late gossiping and telling ghost stories. It's going to be fantastic. I can't wait!"

"Won't it be a bit dangerous?" said Emily in a whisper, so that her parents wouldn't hear that she was on the phone.

"Dangerous?! Why? We live in England – there aren't any big snakes or bears that could eat us alive! Where's your sense of adventure?"

"Well... um... I suppose it might be fun," said Emily doubtfully, "but do you have a tent?"

“Emily! You’re always so practical. I have three brothers. I’m sure one of them will be able to lend us a tent for a weekend.” The line went silent for a few seconds. Then the silence was interrupted by Emily who said, “Look Evie... I have to go now. My Dad’s coming upstairs. I’ll ask my parents about it and speak to you tomorrow.”

“Okay... just one more thing before you go, Emily.”

“Yeah?”

“Can I copy your maths homework?”

“No you can’t! It’s always the same with you!” said Emily angrily.

“But Emily...” begged Evie.

“Okay Evie, just try and do everything you can and then I’ll go through it with you at break time tomorrow.”

“But Emily...” repeated Evie.

“Evie, you need to make sure that you understand it before the exam. Next year we’ll have GCSEs and you’ll definitely need Maths GCSE later in life.”

Evie realized that that was the best offer Emily would make.

“Thanks, Emily. You’re the best.”

“Hmm, okay, see you tomorrow,” whispered Emily quickly. The line went dead.
